

History of the Outdoor Art Club

The Outdoor Art club was formed when a group of women in Mill Valley were upset because of picnickers that were destroying plant life. The famous architect, Bernard Maybeck was chosen by the club to design the building. The building is surrounded by beautiful foliage. Some interesting facts about the Mill Valley Art Club: During WW1 and 2 the club house was given to the Red Cross for service. During 1848, the march for Women's Suffrage, the club worked to raise money for the movement. Today, the Outdoor Art Club is a social center for Mill Valley. It's rented out for weddings, parties and other social functions.
